Common Law Reasoning

The aim of this talk to offer a formal understanding of common law reasoning – especially the nature of this reasoning, but also its point, or justification, in terms of social coordination. I will present two, possibly three, formal models of the common law, and argue for one according to which courts, are best thought of, not as creating and modifying rules, but as generating a priority ordering on reasons. The talk draws on work from the field of AI and Law; it contributes to legal theory, and also, possibly, to applied ethics.

Alle Interessierten, insbesondere auch Studierende, sind herzlich eingeladen.

nächster Vortrag: 18.12. Daniel Cohnitz, University of Tartu: Meta-Internalismus und Referenz
